

E. W. Emanuel, MD:

Pride Medical is a specialty service available to patients who identify as gay, lesbian, queer, non-conform and non-binary questioning individuals.

Stephanie Letourneau, MD:

If you come to Pride Medical Group, you will meet a physician who has a long experience in taking care of the LGBTQ community and will be able to make you feel comfortable, to make you feel heard.

Keith Egan, DO:

I can't think of anything more important for patients than that they trust their primary care provider.

Michael Horberg, MD:

We're going to make you feel welcomed by using the name you prefer to be used, by using the pronouns you've indicated you want to be used.

Keith Egan, DO:

What excites me the most is when a patient comes in and tells me that they feel comfortable sharing their experiences with me. And so to be able to just have a conversation with the patients as they would have with one of their friends.

E. W. Emanuel, MD:

That's pretty rewarding as a physician.

Stephanie Letourneau, MD:

To create those moments where people can really just come in the office and be themselves and say, "I was never able to share this with a doctor before."

Keith Egan, DO:

That's exactly why I went to medical school and why I worked so hard to create the Pride Medical Clinic.

Stephanie Letourneau, MD:

So the doctors at Pride Medical are warm, compassionate, knowledgeable, experienced. They're passionate about what they do. And they will be able to provide you with excellent care when you come to your visits.
